

The most reliable way to address separation anxiety in dogs is gradual desensitization.

Studies have shown this to be the most effective, humane and lasting training method available.

OUR PROMISE

Here at, All Star Paws Dog Training, we are committed to resolving separation anxiety to the greatest extent that we can.

Each dog is unique, both in terms of how they experience separation anxiety and in how quickly and how thoroughly their behavior can be modified. On our end, we spend about three hours a week working with and supporting each client.

There is nothing more gratifying for us than to see a dog once paralyzed by fear and stress react to being alone with nothing more than a “ho-hum” attitude.

That day, when it comes, is truly a cause for celebration and celebrate you should by going out to dinner—and leaving your dog home. Alone.

JennaLee Gallicchio is a certified Dog Trainer (ABCDT) and a Certified Separation Anxiety Trainer (CSAT).

WHY VIRTUAL TRAINING?

For a long time, we’ve known that gradual/methodical desensitization was the only effective training method for separation anxiety. But even if we were able to do it right, that didn’t mean we were consistently able to do it well. We could never see what was going on behind the door when we left the dog alone. We could only guess, and sometimes we guessed wrong.

That is until technology caught up with us. Now, with virtual technology (e.g. Skype and Zoom; laptops, Smartphone’s and tablets), we can watch the dog handle their owner’s absence in real time, from around the block or around the world. We can see when he’s tolerating an absence, and when he’s not.

And we do all that without our presence influencing the separation anxiety training.

It is very important during the training program that you do not leave your dog alone unless it’s part of the day’s homework assignment. It doesn’t have to be you, but someone needs to be there.

Most clients find the prospect of this daunting at the beginning, but we can suggest many possible solutions that will satisfy this requirement. The important thing to remember is that this is temporary.

CANINE SEPARATION ANXIETY HELP

With the proper training method you can regain the freedom, peace of mind and relationship you’ve dreamed of having with your dog.
